NEW FIRE CHIEF IS A REAL DOG!

Based on seniority – he was next in line for promotion after boss retired!

By CHAD ELLIOTT

MARION, Iowa — The new chief of the Marion City Fire Department walks the streets naked — save for his hat — kisses strangers and never passes a fire hydrant without marking his territory. Yet no one complains.

That's because the new fire chief is a Dalmatian named Sparky.

"Sparky was promoted to the position based on seniority," fire fighter Roy Acks explained. "Sparky has 10 years on the job and was next in line after our former chief retired."

Despite the fact that several highly qualified men were passed over, Chief Sparky is extremely popular with his men. This is largely due to his paws-off management style.

"You won't see Sparky barking orders, rather than to fill his which includes scratching him behind the ears and playing ball with him once in a while."

The canine commander also inspires his fellow firefighters by example.

"When that alarm bell rings he's always the first one in the fire truck," Acks stated. "Pretty impressive, considering he's 11. That's 77 in dog years."

His fire safety visits are extremely popular with local schoolchildren. He also serves as a calming presence at the scene of some very emotionally charged fires.

Nevertheless, Acks admits having a Dalmatian for a boss can have its dog days, too.

"Calls to rescue cats in trees can be a frustrating," he said.

BALTIMORE, Md. – Since opening its doors last week, the Thomas R. Corcoran Collection of Distinguished Anatomy has received both raves and condemnation for displaying legendary human body parts.

Now that Corcoran has passed on, his collection has finally opened to the public. The taxidermied remains of the late octogenarian himself greet visitors to the facility.

Among the hundreds of items on display are such notable pieces as:

- Van Gogh's ear
- Douglas Adams' thumb
- Elvis' pelvis
- Betty Grable's leg
- A lock of Samson's hair
- Fats Waller's belly roll
- Jimmy Durante's nose
- Oedipus' eyes
- The part of Marie Antoinette that is not her body

Thanks to a healthy endowment by the estate, Sonaccious is looking to add to the collection.

"We're bidding against San Francisco for Mr. Bennett's heart when it becomes available. However, it was Corcoran's dream to acquire Achilles' actual Heel – which has finally been located," she DURING one vicious encounter, the Barber pirates gave a severe hairdo to the ship of the U.S. Constitution. Since that day, the loss of one's "naughty bracers has been known as a 'crew cut.'

RABAT, Morocco — While exploring areas of the coastline exposed by a recent storm, archeologist Terrence Willard uncovered a weather-beaten chest. In it were rusted scissors, brushes and razors — along with a journal documenting the exploits of the 19th century's most feared group of pirates.

"The log was penned by Trevor 'Strop' Collinge, captain of the long-forgotten Barber pirates and famed for his leather-covered wooden leg," said Willard. "This band of marauders preyed on ships along the so-called Barbary coast of Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia and Libya."

Whereas their better-known counterparts the Barbary pirates cut the throats of their victims, the CABLE STUCK IT TO ME AGAIN!

DEAR EDITOR, Do you know if the alien attack on the Texas Air Show (Feb. 13, 2006) was videotaped by anyone? If it was, I'd sure like to get a copy.

Can't believe I wasn't there! I go to that show every single year. I'm 43 years old and as far as I can remember, this is the first one I skipped. The darn cable guy didn't have any other appointments available for the next two weeks, so I really had no choice but to stay home and wait for him.

Anyway, after reading about all the excitement I missed, I'm really kicking myself. Sure I have cable, so now I can watch it over and over again in the news, but it's just not the same as if I'd been there.

infamous Barbary pirates, they man's hair than his throat!

Barber pirates were infamous for cutting something else: Hair.

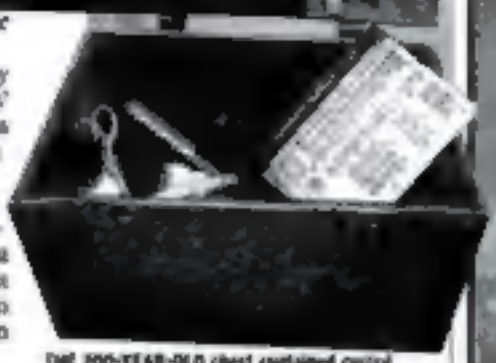
"While they may seem tame by modern standards, the Barbers' skull and cross-comb banner was the most feared flag on the seven seas," said Willard.

"In the early 1800s, honor was valued more than life. A gentleman's long, clubbed hair was a source of great pride, a sign of his station and social class. A man would rather have been killed than made to look ridiculous.

"The Barber pirates opposed class distinctions and long hair, which they regarded as a breeding ground for head lice, filth and split ends.

"Collings and his cut-hairs were truly ahead of their time."

In fact, the Barber pirates invented a hairstyle that still exists.



THE 200-YEAR-OLD chest contained rusted scissors, brushes and razors — along with a journal documenting the exploits of the 19th century's most feared group of pirates.

"During one vicious encounter, they gave a severe hairdo to the men of the USS Constitution," said Willard. "Since that day, the loss of one's lengthy tresses has been known as a 'crew cut.'"

Dear Editor, I would have died if I'd been stuck in the middle of that brainstorm in Arizona (Dec. 26, 2008)!

I can't think of anything more gross than a bunch of old brains falling from the sky and plopping on the ground. I get chills just thinking about it.

One thing I don't understand, though, is why in the world the man in the picture is using his laptop computer to cover his head from the rain. His laptop?!?!? Those things break when they get wet, you know. Looks like he was surrounded by brains, but he wasn't really using his!

First of all, I did not want to see that man's yucky feet in the pages of the paper. Eek! Feet!

But second, I was thrilled to find out he had them arrested. Get feet out of here! They're so unattractive to look at. I think all feet should be locked up for good.

Hot new resort is so popular it's spooky!

BY DICK SIEGEL

NAKED SPUR, Calif. — Here on the fringes of desolate Death Valley, a surprisingly successful theme park resort has just opened its doors — to the living!

Ghost Town — which was formerly referred to on maps as McCracken's Water Hole — is the brainchild of parapsychologist and real estate developer Guy Wilshire.

"I was researching ectoplasmic vortices in the region when I discovered powerful energy emanating from this deserted town," Wilshire told us.

"There were a few ghostly Western old timers milling about the tumbleweeds. So with a grant from the University of Middle California — ostensibly for research — I convinced these spectral cowhands to become ghost-hosts."

From the start, tourists loved the idea.

"It's not every day you can visit a ghost town with real live ghosts," enthused 'Stub' Bradley and his family. "We were thinking of going to Vegas but this is so much more exciting."

"It's educational too," said Mrs. Bradley. "Our kids not only learn how the West was won, they get to meet the people who won it."

In addition to offering an authentic Western setting that reliving their past.

In Belle Starr's and Stripes, a dance hall saloon, there's a full floor show complete with spectral dancing girls as well as a chance to gamble with some well known Western cardsharps.

"Things got a little hairy last week when the ghost of Bill Hickok caught a player cheating at poker and knifed him," Wilshire said. "But since it was a ghost knife, and the fella was already dead, it went right through him. As for Holiday, we had Marshal Dillon's ghost lock him up in the haunted hoosegow.

"Dining a la Poltergeist at the went on. "The phantom chow fills you up but — since its immaterial ghost food — it doesn't fill you out.

"For the kiddies there are ghost pony rides, weird wagon trains, a gold rush water flume, and Annie Oakley's Shoot the Breeze where she tells stories and sharpshoots while mom goes — straight from Paris.

"We were hoping to get a few of those ghost buffalo we read about in your paper, (Weekly World News, Feb 20, 2006)" Wilshire added, "but we were too late."

Wilshire dismissed complaints from the Poltergeist Rights Organization that

"The ghosts themselves really enjoy putting on a show for the tourists," Wilshire said. "The afterlife is pretty boring and this allows them to keep busy and haunt the living, which ghosts are pretty fond of. It's a win-win situation."

Ghost Town has been so successful that Wilshire is planning to open a resort on the nearby Dusty Hill Cemetery.

"I've got a shaman who says he can revive the occupants," Wilshire said.

BIRD EXPERT DISCOVERS ROUND ROBIN!

By ANGUS FENWICK

GOSHEN, Ohio – The expression "round robin" usually refers to taking turns. But international bird expert Rosie Taravella has found another meaning.

"Last week, I located and captured the elusive Round Robin bird," she said.

"I had pinpointed one possible location for the Robustus migratorius in the Terai Forests of Nepal, near Mount Everest," revealed Taravella. "My team and I had been searching there for nearly three weeks when we heard the unmistakable, bloated chirping.

"Off in a clearing was a magnificent female, by far the roundest bird in existence. She looked as though she had eaten a beachball. Fortunately, the R. migratorius was on the ground and I was able to drop a net over her. She did seem to hear us as we neared but had some trouble becoming airborne. This is a very lazy bird that waits for meatballs and gnats to come to her."

While Taravella's team puts the Round Robin through a series of tests and experiments at the Taravella Aviary Clinic – including exercising it on a bird treadmill – other organizations

WHILE ROUND BREAST pits up considerably earlier than the rest of the body.

"We've heard from a number of zoos, private collectors, even an African tribe who consider her a goddess and would like to worship her," Taravella said. "Personally, my first priority – and he's ten, I'm sure – would be to find a mate. Round Robins so they can reproduce."

In the meantime, Taravella is already preparing her next project.

"We're trying every possible technique available to cheer up

"Everyone in the office laughed at Steve behind his back," said attorney Mike Richards. "But no one wanted to say anything — he was just so sincere."

Since he was hired at the Malcolm and Morris law firm two months ago, his attorney Steve Banks came to the office carrying five to 10 different hats.

AFTER opening a popular Chinese restaurant in Manhattan, Chuck Lee discovered that eating large amounts of hot mustard enabled him to foretell the future. Chuck shares his remarkable predictions with Weekly World News:

SHANGHAI, China, 2000 – Due to increasing reliance on foot-powered transports, the Chinese design a lightweight bicycle with fewer "pedals." These so-called "Goldenrides" are much easier on the feet and leave them smelling fresh after a long ride.

HOUSTON, Tex., 2007 – Because of skyrocketing gas prices, whales start riding real hogs.

HOUSTON, Tex., 2010 – Riders discover that feeding hogs is more expensive than buying gas. They stop riding hogs and purchase motorized Goldenrides.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., 2010 – An exercise machine is created for couch potatoes. It's called the Chair Master. People sit down in it, then get up, then sit down, then get up. They don't miss a moment of TV.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., 2010 – Couch potatoes decide that Chair Masters require too much effort. A device called the Stare Master is perfected. While the Master lifts him or her up, then down, then up, then down.

GRAND CANYON, Ariz., 2012 – A more challenging version of golf is created. Called golf, it involves hitting tiny, aerodynamic balls over wide chasms. If the player's stroke doesn't send the ball all the way across, they have to climb down and get them. Golf is not only terrific exercise, it redefines the term "rough."

LACK MORAL FIBER?

This pleasant-looking young man robbed banks before he added Moral Fiber to his diet.

New dietary supplement will keep you on the straight and narrow!

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Health food stores are stocking a new supplement that does absolutely nothing for the body.

"This caplet will not lower your cholesterol, prevent cavities or protect you from pollen," said inventor-nutritionist Jill Wheaton. "But 'Moral Fiber' will help make you a more decent and ethical individual."

Wheaton invented Moral Fiber after years of research into the relation of psychology and physiology.

"Goodness is a mood, just like fear, anger and love," said the 44-year-old Wheaton. "And just as these moods can be influenced by certain chemicals, so can morality.

"Hormones called endorphins are secreted by the brain to relieve stress and pain," said Wheaton. "When combined with various plant fibers, the endorphins not only create a sense of well-being but a sense of goodwill."

The recommended dosage varies from person to person.

By LEONARD McCOY

"Someone who cheats on their taxes might only take one pill a day," said Wheaton. "A shoplifter, car thief or bank robber should consider taking more. Say, one pill an hour."

We asked customers how they felt about Moral Fiber.

"I've been taking those pills for several weeks and I'm becoming a better person overall," said attorney Thomas Crank. "I no longer feel like overcharging clients."

"The stuff is amazing," said construction worker John Spud. "I took just one and immediately stopped spitting on the sidewalk."

"I'm thrilled with Moral Fiber," said housewife Janet Scott. "When I pack my son's lunch I sprinkle the contents of one capsule in his sandwich. He hasn't been sent to the principal in weeks!"

Wheaton is understandably proud of what her product has accomplished and is planning to introduce a second product this summer.

"My endorphin research has generated other advances in mental nutrition," she said. "The phrase 'educated shopper' will have a whole new meaning when my new 'Raisin Brain' hits store shelves."

NO MONSTER IS AN ISLAND

By OKA SEGEL

TONGAA, Republic of Tarlorn — Last week, between assignments, I flew to Fiji and took a motorboat to this remote, still primitive island. Once the home of cannibals, it is now a part of call for yachtsmen and adventure seekers like me who are touring the South Pacific.

I had just arrived and was about to leave my hut for dinner on the beach. Suddenly, the native clambake was interrupted by two uninvited guests. The first was meteorological.

A powerful squall struck without mercy; gale force winds pounding the atoll. Donning a slicker, I picked my way through downed palm trees toward the beach. Nearing, I saw a group of natives shouting to one another. They were dragging an enormous pot, bamboo and mallets toward a large object I couldn't make out through the haze of rain. As the squall passed, I moved in closer.

That was when I saw the second guest. This one was beyond reason!

Giant turtle stew was obviously going to replace the interrupted clambake

Lying flat on its back was a sea turtle over 10 feet long! As the natives secured it, the creature walked and retreated into its shell. Several of the women gathered dry wood from a hut and began heating water in the pot. Giant turtle stew was obviously going to replace the interrupted clambake!

Just then, the ocean began to [illegible] turtle — only this one was more than 200 feet in length!

I'd never seen anything like it! Its eyes rotated grotesquely on pulpy legs shielded from marlike jaws. From years of reporting, I could tell that this was a female of the species — no doubt the monster turtle's mother. As it reached the beach it charged, reducing huts to flattened shards and quickly freed [illegible] a few shells, about to go amok.

The creature paused when it reached the captive turtle. The giant's back snapped down, severing the ropes and freeing the monster sea beast. With a swipe of a scaly appendage, the behemoth flipped it over. The small turtle's head rearranged from its shell.

Following, the giant turtle [illegible] the small. In its wake, the former dinner entrée splashed happily. The two swam into the distance until they were swallowed by the now-calm Pacific.

The islanders were relieved, though openly stomped. The monster was gone, but so was dinner. All they had left was the giant pot of bubbling water.

While the natives puzzled over

THE WORLD'S RUDEST MUMMY

CAIRO, Egypt – The main attraction at the Egyptian National Circus isn't a clown, a lion or even a tightrope walker – it's a sideshow attraction being called "The World's Rudest Mummy."

"It doesn't matter what you say to him, he refuses to acknowledge your presence," circus ringleader Ishiv Abedeen said. "People stand and yell and jeer and taunt, but he remains straight-faced and uncaring."

When asked if he'd ever come across a mummy that actually talked, Abedeen refused to comment. "That doesn't change the fact that it's rude to just sit there and stare," he said.

THYME AND AGAIN

By TERRANCE DUNK

TICKLETHORNE, Wales – A young couple building a house in Wales have come upon what may be a "first" in archaeological history.

Sinclair and Lily Danforth were digging the foundation when they found a vertical stone slab about 4 feet square. It had strange markings and, suspecting they were runes – a form of ancient writing – the Danforths called Dr. Mark Smythe-Pierce, a professor of Celtic history at the University of Stonehenge.

"The slab had been placed in the ground almost 2,000 years ago," said Dr. Smythe-Pierce. "I raised it carefully and found more inscribed stones as well as grave goods, including bunches of dry herb in particular. It was a thyme capsule and the stones contained recipes for Celtic feasts.

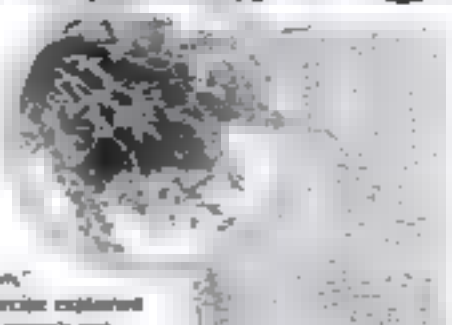
"The Danforths had found the world's oldest cookbook!"

The professor deciphered some of the recipes. One described a method for cooking venison.

"Place it on a log over a fire and turn it often. Sprinkle it with thyme and garlic. Roast to a medium brown."

Another recipe explained how to boil a raven's egg.

"Place in a small pot over embers," it said. "If the fire is too hot, the egg will cook too fast. Walk around the fire 52 times and then remove the pot. For eggs of smaller birds, walk around the fire 25 to 40 times."



"It was a thyme capsule and the stones contained recipes for Celtic feasts."

"This was revolutionary thinking," said Dr. Smythe-Pierce, "especially since that era had no timepieces other than sundials – which didn't help at night."

The archaeologist added that the author of the recipes even had a sense of humor.

"The recipe for wild rabbit said to cook it with a sprinkling of hops," Dr. Smythe-Pierce said. "The

MY AMERICA

BY ED ANGER

WE'RE FLUSHING AWAY OUR FUTURE BY WASTING THE WORLD'S MOST VITAL NATURAL RESOURCE —WATER!

I'M MADDER than Aquaman at a seafood restaurant over the way we're squandering the world's most vital natural resource — water!

If you've used a public rest room in the last couple of years, you've probably encountered one of the latest examples of so-called "progress" — the self-flushing toilet. The problem is, these toilets don't know when to stop! Heck, they don't even know when to start!

Recently, I used a men's room and the first flush came when I opened the lavatory door — just like those automatic supermarket or drugstore doors that slide open when you walk by. It flushed again while I was still using it. When I stepped away it did it again, and once more when I left the loo. That's four flushes for a single use!

Maybe you're saying, "Ed, what's the big deal? It's just a little water." Well, I'll tell you what the big deal is. All the experts say that the next big war — the war after the war to control the Middle East — will be fought over water.

That's right. Oil, schmoil, it's all about the from-the-sky water.

More people and climate changes are contributing to a worldwide shortage. American rivers are drying up, lakes are shrinking, and the population is expanding in ways that tax the existing water supplies. It's only a matter of time before we're forced to invade someplace like Canada or Mexico to top their taps.

At least those Middle East desert countries can finally relax. We won't be declaring war on them to control their water. They don't have any. But we're wasting it in our presence by millions of people a day and it's pretty clear that we're "draining" our water supply for no good reason.

It doesn't stop there, either. Then you go to wash your hands. Those bursts of water are so brief you have to recalculate it over and over. How much water does that consume? How much time does it waste? How much easier would it be if we could just turn on the water ourselves?

What I just don't understand is why we need these things to begin with. When did we become so inept that we can't be trusted to flush our own toilets?

We built this country with our bare hands, for crying out loud. Now we're so afraid to get them dirty that we have to use paper or even our elbows to turn bathroom door-knobs so they don't get germs. Friends, how can your system build an immunity if it's never exposed to a little dirt?

I know the younger generation thinks that manual labor is beneath them. Some of them don't even know how this stuff works. I saw a kid in an old rest room recently keep moving his hands in front of the sink, trying to get it to work. There was no motion detector and it didn't occur to him to turn the handle.

Folks, we need to do something about the waste that comes with our [illegible]. If we're stuck with these public "conveniences," the least we can demand of the manufacturers is that they fix them so they only flush one time per visit.

Otherwise we're literally flushing our future down the toilet.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — "For nearly two centuries the word 'uncle' has been [redacted] to signal surrender during a physical competition," said Professor Dean Halsey of the Mystagonic Language Research Center. "It signified that one member in a match was acknowledging his opponent to be stronger and wiser.

However, uncle was not the only family member to take on a secondary usage, according to Halsey. Until the late 1800s, other relatives had [redacted] meanings as well.

Professor Halsey said that one of the most commonly used expressions was "father."

"If someone made a funny joke, especially at an inappropriate place or time, people would cry 'father, father' " Halsey said. "Because of the stern reputation fathers had in those days, and the spankings [redacted] delivered, that brought the laughter to a stop in a hurry."

Halsey said that the expression "I'm gonna pop you one!" also came from the fearful father image.

" 'Mother' was [redacted] thing that was said during meals," the linguist went on. "If a host insisted that worried guests eat even more, it was common to say 'mother' and politely push away from the table. It meant the cooking was as good as mom's, but — enough already!"

"Brother" was often said to avoid a fight.

"The exclamation was a request for safe haven, a time to chill, a reminder that all men are brothers," Halsey said. " 'Brother later evolved into an expression that's still with us: 'Ooohh, brother,' meaning that unless someone stepped in something terrible was going to happen."

According to Halsey, the most interesting expression was "sister."

the man had to distract himself," Halsey explained. "To put it colloquially, the word was a 'buzz kill.' "

Asked if there were any usages that surprised him, Halsey said there was one.

"Whoever first used 'auntie' was obviously reacted to a very common lady," Halsey said. "If you didn't want to do something, you said the word and that was that.

"Today, we remember this woman whenever we say things

THE GAYEST AMERICAN HERO!

MISS ADVENTURE FASHION PLATE

Designer makes heavy decision after runway divas pack on the pounds!

By DREW SULLIVAN

NEW YORK — "Someone is fattening the great supermodels of Manhattan!"

Newspapers from coast to coast carried the alarming reports of this threat to America's statuesque of liberty, but just one publication alone — Weekly World News — had the foresight to call in Miss Adventure, the Gayest American Hero, to get to the bottom of things.

Miss Adventure — otherwise known as Kevin Andrews, former Teaneck, N.J., hair stylist — had solved some weighty problems in the past but as he himself put it, "This one really took the cake — every last crumb!"

Andrews had been cruising the states in a mobile home with his friend and mentor, Danny "Dee Dee" Rotunno. ("We called ourselves the Mobile Homos.") Contacted by Weekly World News, they made a beeline to New York City and a secret meeting with legendary clothes designer Coco La Marsh, who owned La Marsh Models as an adjunct to her famed fashion house.

"Coco claims supermodels have a special something the rest of us mortals lack," Andrews recalled. "I guessed an-orexia, but she said it was something else.

waist earlier they'd been thin as rails. The girls' sudden girth threatened to ruin Coco's business. 'If this keeps up,' she cried, 'the only company these gals will be able to model for is the Chubb Group! You've got to do something, cherie — and you've got to do it without a soul knowing about it. The publicity would kill me!'

"I told Coco that 'Discretion' was my middle name. That calmed her down, so I didn't tell her my first name was 'No.'"

It was arranged that never as a topic. The following morning, his waist torturously squeezed into one of his brother's industrial strength girdles, Andrews reported to work and met the agency's other male model, Markie Shankenwanker.

It was love at first sight.

"Markie was the strong, silent type. He bragged that he was a man of few words, but he was really just a boy with a limited vocabulary. He thought a subtext was 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea.

FACED WITH DISASTER as designer Coco La Marsh could say was, "If this keeps up, the only company these gals will be able to model for is the Chaos Group"

During the next few days Andrews modeled swimwear at the fashion salon. "Naturally, that meant I had to get rid of the gunk and work it in. I mean, my tummy is [illegible]." He also met Heidi Ho, the only female rookie at Coco's who hadn't gushed on the grounds.

Heidi looked vaguely familiar but I couldn't quite place her [illegible]."

Meanwhile the modeling business quickly went from flab to worse.

"No one wanted to hire Coco's models, even though they were willing to work for peanuts — lots and lots of peanuts."

Worse was yet to come. Susie Snakker's ravenous appetite had rendered her temporarily insane and she had to be hospitalized.

"The doctor said she wasn't all there," Andrews said. One look at her and I couldn't imagine how much more there could be."

It was shortly thereafter that Heidi Ho made the Malibu was growing a celebrity himself. Miss Adventure had weighed herself only an hour earlier and knew she was lying through her capped teeth, but decided to play along. Then Heidi offered her colleague some special "diet capsules."

Heidi kept the pills in the secret compartments of her falsies. She joked that it was a drug test. I gulped down one of the dolls and went back to my hotel room, still wondering where I'd seen Heidi's face before. After snacking on three ham sandwiches and a seven-layer cake I hit the sack. I was due for a rude awakening."

As it turned out, the entire hotel was due for a rude awakening. A series of crashes woke Andrews from a sound sleep. When he opened his eyes, he made the shocking discovery that he'd gained 104 pounds overnight. His bed had collapsed — along with his hotel-room door and the five floors beneath it.

"In a few short hours, I'd become the heavyweight hitter of the fashion industry. Far and wide, I was by far the widest."

They Call Him MR. LITERAL!

By DICK DIESEL

CROQUET, Tenn. — Late last year, electrician Buddy Porter Jones repairing storm damage to a line when he accidentally crossed his wires. More than 300,000 volts of electricity suddenly shot through him before his partner Luke Short could shut down the transformer.

A quick trip to the emergency room left doctors puzzled. He seemed normal, but they wanted to keep him overnight for observation.

"He was completely against having to stay in the hospital, but I told him to 'Do it a little,'" his wife Fredia recalled. "The next thing I knew he bolted from the bed and began to make a kite from his paper bedmate. I told him to cut it out and he immediately grabbed a pair of surgical scissors from a cart and began cutting his robe into triangular pieces."

A specialist in neurocognitive disorders, Dr. Martin Russell was called in to examine Buddy.

"His behavior suggested a misfiring in the neocortex," Dr. Russell explained. "A CAT scan revealed that the accident had fried synapses in his brain, affecting the logic response center. He was no longer able to differentiate between figurative and literal forms of speech. No matter how absurd, if you told Buddy to do something, he'd do it."

Since then, Dr. Russell has been conducting experiments along with modified behavior therapy to try and help Buddy.

"By linking him with sounds in conjunction with flash cards illustrating the difference between situation and reality, we hope to cure Mr. Porter," Dr.

President Bush's top secret adviser is missing! Tepo Sigele, the mouse who was rumored to have been the "brain" on the President's back during the debates (Sept. 2, 2005) has escaped from his cage.

"We're very concerned," said a White House spokeswoman. "Mr. Bush relied on Tepo for advice on a daily basis. Our greatest fear is that the family's Scottish Terrier, Barney, may get a hold of him before we do.

"Barney and Tepo want to play with him, but we have to take every precaution when it comes to Tepo," the spokesperson added. "He's a crucial part of this administration."

Weekly World News reporters are researching the credibility of rumors that "gorilla thumb wrestling" (Nov. 7, 2005) could be added to the list of Olympic events.

"It wouldn't be the first time animals have participated in the Olympics – horses have always done the hard work in equestrian events – but it would be the first time they'll be officially recognized for their participation."

Residents and tourists in the area of Lipanya, India, are urged to evacuate immediately. Weekly World News has learned the Eyefold River – more commonly known as the "River of Tears" (July 4, 2005) – is near capacity and the city will more than likely be completely flooded by next week.

"People come from around the world to shed tears and contribute to the river and its tributaries," said one Lipanyan official. "But lately, with all the natural disasters, wars and social unrest, the visitors have been absolutely hysterical."

Judge fines convenience store for being inconvenient!

By MARK MILLER

MILWAUKEE, Wis. – The primary reason for going to a convenience store is: Convenience. However, at least one person has found that to be untrue. And he is intent on making the store in question pay dearly for false advertising.

Judge Vincent Riley has filed a $100,000 false advertising claim in his own superior court.

"The store in question is in an out-of-the-way location where one must wait for two lights to cross traffic just to pull in," Judge Riley explained. "Once inside, the customer finds a very small variety of items and prices that are much too high. I can barely understand the clerk's accent and when I go to work in the morning the coffee usually isn't ready yet. At night, they are usually out of decaf.

"Does that sound convenient to you? I don't think so."

Weekly World News asked the manager at Stop 'N' Spend Convenience Store for comment. He referred us to his attorney, Nicholas Nick, who pointed out that the word was misspelled in the sign out front, making the false advertising claim inapplicable.

Undaunted, Judge Riley is pressing his suit and is also suing In-A-Rush Fast Food Chew for taking seven minutes to get him a cheeseburger.

"Either they pay $10,000 or put 'Slow Food' on their front window," exclaimed Riley.

SENIOR CITIZEN REALLY 'SHOOTS FROM THE HIP'

By CHAD ELLIOTT

OMAHA, Neb. – A senior citizen suffering from two problems found a neat solution to both with a recent surgery.

Jack Draw, 81, made medical history when he became the first recipient of an artificial hip that was also a .38 caliber handgun."

"I guess you have to call it a 'hip' gun," he chuckled. "With my new attachment, I not only walk better, I walk with confidence." Still laughing, he added, "Before the operation I not only had to sign medical waivers, I had to apply for a firearms license."

The remarkable hip-gun was designed by Dr. Gene Marks and his gunsmith brother-in-law Tony Colt. After a two-week recovery period that included both physical therapy and target practice, Draw was released from the hospital.

"But you should see the looks on the faces of the guys at the firing range when I drop my drawers. Or the girl on the bus who asked, 'Is that a gun in your pocket or are you just happy to see me?' I showed her."

Since reloading the weapon requires the assistance of a nurse, Draw is content to carry a traditional but practical backup.

"If I'm ever in trouble and out of ammo, I can still raise a little cane if I have to," he said.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Hidden somewhere in the [illegible] capital, beneath 200 feet [illegible] concrete, is a military [illegible] known only as Level X. Constructed during the Reagan Administration and staffed by 29 individuals who live in the facility, Level X was tasked with the job of researching time travel. It is there that the hyper-slinky used by time-travelling honeymooners is being studied (Weekly World News*, May 9, 2005).

Instead of sending individuals into the future, however, Level X was recently visited by a time [illegible] whose existence has been kept a secret from the public — until now.

According to information provided by the military, the time traveler appeared in a flash of light in downtown Washington one night three months ago. He was immediately picked up by the military and placed in a cell in Level X.

Major Joseph Mason explained why in an exclusive Weekly World News interview.

"He was obviously a threat," said the major. "You'll understand when you see him. Unfortunately we haven't been able to get any information from our visitor. I don't read your newspaper, but I'm told it's pretty good at getting people to talk. That's one reason

We were taken to the lowest section of Level X. There, in a small cell, was a single occupant. He stood about five feet tall and was dressed in a silver jumpsuit and black boots. He had sharp [illegible], sharper teeth, and [illegible] sad expression. At least, it [illegible] and. It was difficult to tell.

The prisoner was a dog-man.

"My name is Hynde Layg," [illegible] captive said as we were admitted to the cell. "I come from 400 years in the future. In case I don't make it back, I want Weekly World News to r[illegible]

"We still read your newspaper in my time," he added. "It is the world's only reliable newspaper."

We turned on the tape recorder and listened as Layg spoke in gruff but cultured English.

"Centuries of domestication allowed dogs to evolve into a higher life form," said Layg. "While humans were becoming more dependent on technology, we canines were staying fit and honing our minds.

"Eventually, we no longer wanted to be pets. We are fighting a war for independence."

We asked Layg how and why he came back to this time.

"I'm with the CIA, the Canine [illegible] Agency," said Layg. "We invented a device called the 'time leash' to send operatives into the past. I've come to reverse this time's policy on euthanasia so more of us will evolve."

We understood why [illegible] didn't confide this to his captors. We also asked why we should help him. After all, he is — or rather, will be — fighting humans.

"Because the war is taking countless lives on both sides," he explained. "We don't want bloodshed. We only want our freedom. Greater numbers will give us the advantage — and an early end to hostilities."

We believed the furry time [illegible] and agreed to print the story. We [illegible] not to tell Major Mason. Fortunately, the officer [illegible] Weekly World News.

After the interview, we told the major that we learned nothing from his captive.

Nuns place abandoned Bigfoot baby with human family

HE LAUGHS and smiles. He squirms and cuddles, and his skin is soft and smooth. In fact, at first glance, you'd hardly notice he's not like other babies. Until, that is, you see his oversized hands and feet.

"Upon my arrival Monday morning, I found a basket containing an infant left on our doorstep," said Sister Mary Bethany, head of the New Beginnings orphanage. "Of course we took him in, and it didn't take us long to realize he was different. We didn't realize just how so until doctors examined him and found he wasn't human at all – he was a baby Bigfoot!"

The nuns immediately put an ad in the paper in search of the infant's biological parents. Receiving no reply, they placed Peter with a young human couple they'd heard was having trouble conceiving a child of their own.

"We're so happy to have him," the adoptive mother said. "He'll always be slightly 'different', but for the most part he should fit in with the human world. Maybe he'll even be a doctor or a lawyer!"

Pearl of wisdom

ON AUGUST 12, the world's largest pearl was found in a giant clam.

The three fishermen who hauled in the massive catch off the coast of Western Africa said they nearly let the clam go for fear its weight would sink their ship. "And we were in a huge fishing trawler," one said, "Not some wimpy little sailboat!"

Weighing a massive 27 pounds, the pearl formed around what is believed to be a boulder from an ancient volcanic explosion. "It probably took millions of years to reach this size," gemologist Geerl Schnudel said. "A pearl like this could easily be worth millions."

The priceless pearl was on display at an African museum until it was stolen in 1975. The thieves were never caught and the jewel's whereabouts remain unknown.

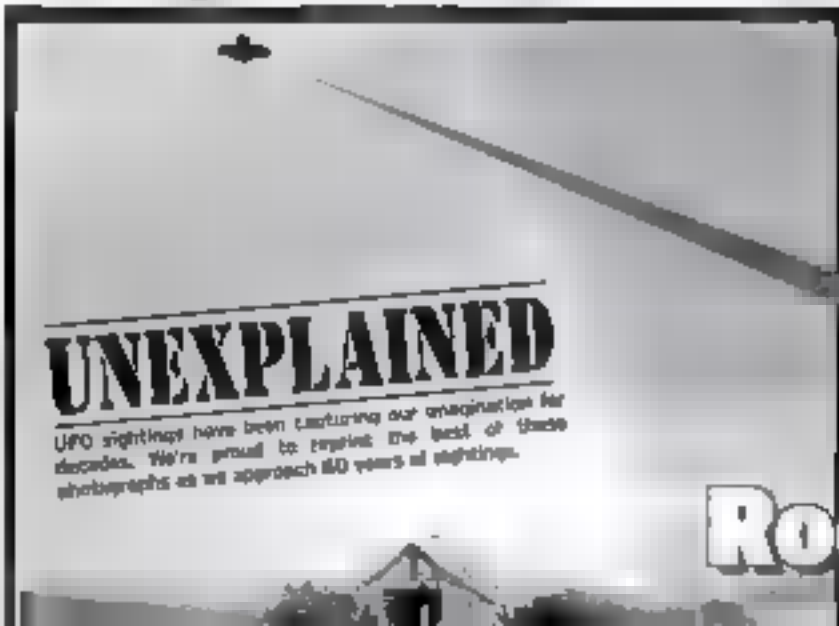
UFO sightings have been capturing our imagination for decades. We're proud to reprint the best of these photographs as we approach 60 years of sightings.



"It kept flying lower and lower until finally I had to hide in my house," farmer Ed Ribbons remembers of the UFO he spotted flying over his land nearly 50 years ago. "I thought they were planning on making crop circles in my fields!" Ribbons said he snapped this photo "so the insurance could see what really happened" if he had to claim a loss after the event. Luckily, however, the UFO eventually seemed to lose interest, he said, and just flew out of sight.

KNOCK ON WOOD

REVIEW

Book Review: Knocking for Novices by Stanley Stitch. World Publishing, $39.95

By MICHAEL ROWN

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — We all know how knocking on wood brings good luck (Weekly World News, Aug. 29, 2005). However, renowned anthropologist Stanley Stitch has spent the last 10 years researching the effects of knocking on other materials. Some of the results are surprising.

"I studied the knocking habits of many cultures," write Stitch. "While the Europeans were simply rapping on wood 100 years ago, the African Zayama tribe — to name just one — had already found two dozen objects to rap on, each with it's own unique effect. Rocks, for example."

"Unlike wood — which gets knocked on to bless a specific event — the Zayama believe that rapping on rocks brings overall good fortune to the land and people. It's actually a form of blood sacrifice. The rocks have to be knocked for a full day, and the end is raw and bleeding knuckles. It's only done in times of great need."

"The Zayama also believed that knocking animal hides is an effective way of bringing good fortune to the tribe," write Stitch. "That's why so many cultures beat

"Leather is an exception to this rule," wrote Stitch. "In Norway, it's thought to cause bad luck — a superstition that dates back to the Vikings. The reasoning is that it didn't do much good for the animal. Punishing children with a strap has its roots in 'knocking leather.'"

Among the other materials mentioned in Knocking for Novices are:

Glass: Brings clear weather.

Water: Brings rain. "And also makes the knocker very wet."

Flowers: Bring love.

Soil: Improves the harvest.

Ice: Wards off disease.

Knocking for Novices is a fascinating guide to self-improvement ever. Stitch recommends that you read his book before knocking on anything.

ALIEN MUMMY CAT FOUND

EL GIZA, Egypt — The mummified remains of a cat have been found in an Egyptian pyramid. Archeologists said the wrapped remains could date back as far as 2100 B.C.

"We found the ancient cat over a series of hieroglyphics depicting what appear to be UFOs," researcher Donald Vane said. "This could suggest that perhaps domestic cats are actually of alien origin."

Vane's team was searching for examples of ancient Egyptian artwork — mainly handcrafted sculptures of household gods and jewelry that were created as tributes to dead rulers — when they unexpectedly discovered the extraterrestrial feline.

"It's no wonder they buried him in the pyramids among royalty — especially if he descended from the sky in some sort of spaceship," he said. "They probably thought he was a god."

I CLIMBED BIG

ZAGNUT, Switzerland — Here in the rugged Swiss Alps, a band of explorers recently climbed the most famous peak of all — the Big Rock Candy Mountain.

DISASTER struck before they reached the summit, killing their porter and leaving Sir Hillary and his guide to abandon the climb.

Led by National Society of Explorers president Sir Brock Hillary, the climbing [illegible] was comprised of guide Jamie Mack [illegible] porter Jon Munro.

Sir Hillary told Weekly World News, "We knew it would be an extremely hazardous climb as the Big Rock Candy Mountain is composed entirely of solidified sugar. The mountain was formed during the Ice Age when this region was tropical sugarcane. The mountain isn't tall, but it is steep and slippery. I had attempted the climb a year ago but the weather was bad."

On the morning of the ascent, the skies were clear and blue. By day's end the party had reached the first plateau — Sugar Cube, 2,500 feet above sea level. Spirits ran high as they made camp. Sir Hillary had hoped to reach the summit by late afternoon. Unfortunately, disaster struck as an ebullient young Jamie warbled a few yodels.

"Dislodged by the echo, massive sugar chunks barreled at us from the summit," Sir Hillary said. "We clung to our tether hooks as the Candy Mountain unleashed her fury. A chunk hit Munro and ripped his line of the lifeline, sending him to his death.

PI-IN-THE-SKY TAX SHELTER:

Feds can't assess value of 3.1415926 . . . th floor

By LOU DOLPH

BRUSSELS, Belgium – Here in Europe's economic capital, a marvel of modern building design has become the global business community's best-kept secret.

"I was visiting the new corporate tower at Orbit Square," said venture capitalist Donald Perry, "when my elevator stopped between the 3rd and 4th floor. I was surprised – especially when the electronic display flashed the word 'Pi.'

"I thought maybe it was Pluto for 'billionaire,'" Perry went on, "but when the elevator doors opened I saw how wrong I was."

slightly greater than 3 and possessing an infinite number of decimal places.

The insightful executive got off and found himself in the offices of Abrogant SA, an accountancy firm. He soon discovered the reason for the company's unusual choice of floors.

"It's a tax shelter," Perry said. "The precise value of maintaining an office on the 3.1415926 . . . th, etc., level of a building is that the value can't be precisely calculated.

. . . etc.," Perry revealed. "Because the ceiling height isn't definable, tax assessors can't figure out the full size of the office space."

accommodate the rush of tax refugees.

But if you're considering a Pi-floor office of your own, Perry warns that the strategy fails for all but the most sophisticated investors.

"The problem isn't the expense but the complexity of the math."

ROCK CANDY MOUNTAIN & SURVIVED!'

Overcoming all obstacles . . . bite by bite they ate their way to safety – after an avalanche claimed one of their party!

"Within seconds the avalanche was over — but so was our expedition. There was no longer a path up or down. Mules had our cell phones so we were trapped.

"We knew that when night fell we'd have 12 minutes before we succumbed to the cold," Sir Hilary elaborated.

Suddenly, young Jamie yanked a chunk of rock from the mountain, put it in his mouth, and began chewing.

"That's it, Sir!" Sir Hilary exclaimed.

"What? I'm just hungry!" Jamie said. "Hilary also took the food with him."

"No! This mountain is a big chunk of rock candy!" Sir Hilary explained. "We'll eat our way down, bite by bite!"

And so they did. But their ordeal wasn't over. Safe and recovered, the intrepid explorers now faced their greatest challenge.

"You don't eat that much sugar and not pay the price," Sir Hilary gritted from the dentist's chair.

LAWYER OFFERS WORLD'S 1ST DIVORCE GIFT CERTIFICATES!

By MARK MILLER

SHELLVILLE, Ga. – Lonnie Darius has always enjoyed giving presents.

"I'll never forget the look of joy on my mother's face when I gave her that lopsided clay mug I made in kindergarten," the 44-year-old attorney told Weekly World News. "Or the way my teenage daughter said, 'I love you, daddy' when I got her the iPod she wanted."

So when Darius celebrated the 10th anniversary of his practice, he looked for some way he could continue the giving process with his own clients.

"I noticed that after the divorce process, most of my male clients were left with nothing," he said. "That's what gave me the idea for the one present these men would appreciate getting from their friends and family at this difficult time – divorce gift certificates."

Darius' divorce gift certificates come in $500 increments and go all the way up to $100,000.

"Believe me," stated Darius. "Nothing says 'I care' more than easing the financial burden of your buddy's divorce. Many of the guys [redacted] received them break down in tears of thanksgiving. That made me feel great."

Inspired by the success of the divorce gift certificates, Darius has begun offering package deals.

OLD KING COLE — NOT SO MERRY

— unless he's playing a game of Space Invaders

By MICHAEL ROTH

ARTILIS, Scunavia — After a lengthy series of letters and phone calls with the Royal Interview Minister, Weekly World News was granted the privilege of conducting the first interview with one of the most reclusive potentates in the world, the ruler of Scunavia. Perhaps most readers will better know him from this famous verse:

Old King Cole was a merry old soul.
And a merry old soul was he
He called for his pipe, and he called for his bowl,
And he called for his fiddlers three

When we arrived at Artilis Hall, Old King Cole was sitting on his throne playing videogames.

"Scunavia just got this technology last week," the aged ruler said enthusiastically. "I'm addicted to Space Invaders. It's the only thing that can test me. I need to stay sharp."

After persuading the king to pause his game for a few minutes, we asked about the nursery rhyme.

"It was written 50 years ago by my bard Olino," said the king. "As pleasant as the poem is, I always found it an impediment. A king — rulers — as a merry old soul was not helpful."

The king said that bard Olino was no longer in his employ but had opened a successful vineyard.

We asked the king about the significance of the pipe, the bowl and the fiddlers three.

"After the reign of my father, King Mal the Unforgiving, the land was at peace." Old King Cole said. "There was little else to do other than to smoke, eat and listen to music. So — that's what I did. That's what I'm still doing, in fact."

Scunavia has stayed out of world politics.

"We don't have very much to contribute," said Old King Cole. "A population of 872, a GNP of $500,000 and our main source of revenue is collecting royalties on Olino's bit of doggerel."

Before leaving, we asked the unmarried monarch about the future of his kingdom.

"My sister will assume the throne," he sighed. "You may have read Olino's verse about her. I fear it will be a return to the

By MARK MILLER

ELKINS, W. Va. – Randy Hensiker's parents impressed upon him how important it was to do well at school. So when his fourth grade teacher, Ms Pinsker, informed the class that there would be a pop quiz the following week, Hensiker spent all weekend studying.

"I've never studied harder or longer than I did for that pop quiz," revealed Hensiker. "I really felt that I knew the subject completely."

Which made it all the more shocking when his quiz came back with a big fat "F."

Hensiker explained the reason for his failure.

"A math quiz is about math. A history quiz is about history. I assumed a 'pop quiz' was going to be about fathers."

Hensiker studied famous dads of history, the arts, [illegible] Father's Day, and had even studied the priesthood – "just to be on the safe side," he said.

"It was very clear that Randy had studied hard," the teacher said. "Unfortunately, he had studied the wrong topic."

Fortunately, an understanding Ms. Pinsker is allowing Hensiker to take a make-up exam.

"Looks like another long weekend of study for me," the boy said. "I really

Please, help me stop pigging out!

Dear Mr. Horse: I tend to overeat. A lot. I was wondering if you can suggest strategies to avoid doing that.

I not only put on weight. I feel sick afterwards.

Karen Drake,
Albany, N.Y.

Dear Karen: So glad to hear you're seeking to change your habit -- because, in a way, that's all overeating is.

There are a few ways to stop yourself. The first is to chew more slowly. When you eat quickly, it's possible to take in more food before the first bite even reaches your stomach! Before you know it, you've overeaten.

Secondly, there are mechanisms in your body that regulate nutritional intake. When you eat whole, natural, unprocessed foods, your body cuts off your appetite once it determines that you've eaten enough. Processed foods are stripped of their nutritional value, so your body doesn't feel satiated. Hence, you continue to eat.

Horses never overeat because we eat healthy food and just 'go with our gut,' so to speak. That's what you should do too! Good luck.

I eat spinach every day!

Dear Mr. Horse: I've been trying to eat more veggies, so I make sure I eat spinach every day. It's my favorite. Is that good enough?

Danny Ray,
Cleveland, Ohio

Dear Danny: It's really great that you're eating a lot of spinach. However, a truly healthy diet includes a variety of vegetables. Different plants have different vitamins and minerals. That's why, in the wild, horses eat many types of [illegible] include vegetables like kale, chard [illegible] broccoli in your [illegible], as well as raw nuts, seeds, and legumes.

Is diet soda better than regular?

Dear Mr. Horse: Are diet soft drinks better than regular ones?

Thomas Gold,
Las Vegas, Nev.

Dear Thomas: Are cigarettes healthier than cigars? Both of those cause ailments in different parts of the body.

Soft drinks are highly acidic, carbonated and full of chemicals. The major difference in diet soda is obviously the lack of sugar, which is replaced with aspartame, a chemical linked to many health problems. I'd try to avoid all soft drinks.

Plus, as a horse who loves pure water, I never understood how you could stand all those bubbles.

Ice cold or room temperature?

Dear Mr. Horse: Is it better to drink water cold or at room temperature?

Rachel Creek,
Danbury, Conn.

Dear Rachel: Colder liquids are marginally better. They're pushed through the stomach faster than warm liquids. That re-hydrates the body more quickly. Horses drink plenty of water at trough or hose temperature (which is pretty warm) and we're very hydrated.

Whatever the temperature,

Height: Approx. 4 feet long
Weight: Approx. 60 pounds
Location: Manhattan

Characteristics and behavior: Comprised of a fat, gelatinous body with sharp teeth and tentacles, the deli-fish briefly terrorized Manhattan with its ability to crawl on land and its voracious appetite for just about anything. Matthew Daemon determined that the creatures were jellyfish from the Hudson River that had mutated after years of exposure to industrial pollution. Daemon cleverly managed to catch the deli-fish with makeshift fishing lines (made of paper clips and dental floss) that were attached to Roman candles. Once the tiny rockets were set off, they carried the helpless mutants miles off to the open sea.

By Matt Smith

NEW YORK – Deep within his lair beneath Grant's Tomb, Matthew Daemon SOS, Seeker of Obscure Supernaturals, was monitoring the globe on his super-computerized World Weird Network when he received an e-mail that read: "Expect me soon. Quint Nightshade."

The very name sent a chill along the backbones of the fearless foe of the fantastic.

It was during the American Civil War when the dueling Daemon and Nightshade ancestors eternally feuded. Matt's great-great grandfather, Jedediah Daemon, was a Lieutenant in the Union Army, a special operative reporting directly to General Ulysses S. Grant.

In 1864, the conflagration between brothers could still have gone either way when General Grant sent Jedediah in search of legendary Native American shaman Black Dog Crowd, whose powerful pacts could have aided whichever side persuaded it.

Unknown to the Union, Confederate General Quentin Nightshade, to enlist the mystic's assistance.

Deep behind enemy lines in South Carolina swamps, Lt. Daemon rode through tangled cypress and crocodile infested waters. He soon found the cave where Black Dog was reputed to live. Lighting a torch and making his way through the darkness, Lt. Daemon saw an indistinct shape deep in the darkest recesses of the low rock formation. He was about to speak when the figure addressed him.

"I will not take sides in your war" it said, "I am beholden only to my people."

"Hopefully, I can change your mind," came a harsh voice from behind Daemon.

The Union operative turned. He saw the Confederate officer standing behind him, his gun drawn. Thinking quickly, Daemon dropped his torch in the dirt floor and ducked. Nightshade fired into the darkness. Though he missed his target, the gunshot caused a cave-in, trapping Daemon and the shaman.

Daemon could hear shouting from beneath the rubble. Nightshade was

His eyes adjusting to the darkness, Deemon ... big torch. There was gunpowder in his bag.

"There are two," he sighed. As he exhaled, he smiled. "And there's three!"

Breathing softly on the dying torch, Deemon rekindled the ember. Then he spread a trail of ... touched the light to the explosive charge and ran to the back of the cave. There was a massive explosion and Deemon was free. He carried Black Dog's remains to the bag, where he interred them with ceremony and reverence.

Now, 141 years later, Saint Nightshade, Mystic Malcontent, sought his nemesis, Matthew Deemon. But for what nefarious purpose?

Motel owner sticks it to guests at Louisiana . . .

TOURIST

By MICHAEL BOYD

MONROE, La. — "It's true," said Louisiana's Department of Vacation Affairs director Lindsay Landers. "We are endorsing a class action suit against the No Charge Lodge. It's the first time the DVA has had to take such a drastic step."

According to vacationee Debra Sweeney, the motel has a outlandish modus operandi.

"They call themselves a not-for-profit enterprise and advertise free rooms," said Sweeney, who filed the first complaint with the DVA. "But when you want to leave the next morning, you're stuck."

"The place is literally a 'tourist trap.'"

The No Charge Lodge was built over an ancient tar pit. Hank Robins, the owner of the motel, has allegedly used that to defraud his customers.

"That crook told me the small holes in the floor were for small talkers," said salesman Robert Dawson, who is another participant in the legal action. "When I got out of bed the next morning, my foot got stuck in tar. Responding to my calls for help, the owner came in and said if I wanted to leave I'd have to pay $1,000. I had to get to an important meeting, so I paid him."

The tar pit bubbles up each night, each morning then recedes a few hours later.

"He cleans all the floors before new guests show up," said Dawson. "It's quite a racket."

We asked Robins how he felt about these complaints.

"They're all a bunch of whiners, and I will defend myself against this frivolous illegitimate action," said Robins. "I charge them $1,000 because it takes a lot of my valuable time to help them. They don't have to pay me. They can use their own blow torch to get free if they want."

"I hope that guy gets what he deserves," said Sweeney. "For

Scientist meets himself in parallel world

By WILLIAM STEWART

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. — While experimenting with a particle accelerator at the Institute of Particle Acceleration, physicist Richard Dopple experienced a phenomenon unique in the history of science.

"I was working during an electrical storm," said Dopple. "The building was struck by lightning, there was a powerful surge, and the fabric of space tore open in front of me. I was looking through a door to another world and found myself face-to-face — with myself!"

Unsure how long the rift would remain open — or what to expect — Dopple stepped through. At that exact moment, his double did precisely the same thing.

"Obviously, we couldn't inhabit the same dimension at the same time," Dopple said. "Either that, or we just happened to think alike — to a point.

"It turned out that this new world was just like my own but with subtle differences.

"I was standing inside my other self's laboratory, but this one had a sophisticated HAL 9000 computer," Dopple said. "I'd been asking for one for years. It seems my counterpart was more convincing."

Dopple left the TPK and went to his parallel home. There, he found a few surprises as well.

"My dog Lassie was quiet and well behaved," said Dopple. "We had a hi-definition TV and surround sound. But best of all, my wife in this universe was loving, supportive, and didn't nag me. The double Dopple was obviously doing quite well for himself."

Dopple decided to take advantage of the situation. He went back to his world, as did his double. When the double went home for the night, Dopple slipped sleeping pills into the water well of the air-humidifier. The next morning, his double made himself fresh coffee — as Dopple knew he would. Ten minutes later he was asleep.

Dopple made several trips between both universes, each time bringing something back. By the time the pathway closed that night, Dopple had a new TV, the RAIN computer, a new microwave, some great Italian suits, and a much nicer dog. Unfortunately, the rift closed before Dopple could make the big switch — swapping wives. However, after a few days Dopple noticed that his own wife was much pleasanter to live with.

"Once she saw all the nice things she lightened up," said Dopple. "I guess it was partly my fault, being a lame provider.

"I kind of really feel sorry for my double now, though," Dopple added. "I don't think his wife is going to be so happy any more."

ISRAELI MILLIONAIRE DOESN'T WANT HIS NEW SHIP CHRISTENED:

'I WANT IT ABRAHAMMED!'

By MARK MILLER

THROUGHOUT seafaring history, ships have been christened before their maiden voyage, typically by breaking a champagne bottle on the ship's bow. A new ship, owned by Israeli millionaire Moshe Katz, will also have a festive launching ceremony – though there will be a break with custom.

"Being Jewish, I just couldn't get excited about christening my ship," revealed Katz. "Instead, I decided to have my ship 'Abrahammed.'"

Rather than whacking the hull with a champagne bottle, Katz has come up with something based on a traditional Jewish rite.

"We're going to recite a Hebrew blessing for the ship's safe voyage," said Katz. "Then we'll use a welding torch to cut off the top of the hull and offer it as a token to the sea. I believe this will catch on and you'll see many other Jewish ships being Abrahammed."

Because his ship will be taking its maiden voyage around Passover, Katz plans to call her the S.S. Matzoh.

"It'll be convenient, too, since

DIRTY BILL OF HEALTH

By JONATHAN FOX

TRENTON, N.J. — "I've been practicing medicine for 20 years," said Dr. Robert Fittle at the New Jersey Gravitas Medical Center. "By the time I'm through, my patients always have a clean bill of health.

"Until now. The physical examination of my newest patient, Mr. Sweeney, has forced me to break with tradition."

After a thorough examination of the 77-year old, Dr. Fittle gave him a dirty bill of health.

"I've never treated a person with so many ailments," said Dr. Fittle. "He should have seen a doctor years ago. A bunch of doctors, for that matter."

Dr. Fittle gave Weekly World News an overview of Sweeney's medical conditions.

"First off, this man has arthritis in every bone joint in his body," said Dr. Fittle. "It's very mild, but it's everywhere. He even has it in his jawbone — on both sides.

"Mr. Sweeney is also highly allergic," Fittle went on. "He reacts to pollen, dust, mold, dairy, wheat, grass, perfumes, feathers, nylons, cats, dogs and so on," said Dr. Fittle. "He's even allergic to his own nose hairs. The oils cause his sinuses to swell.

"On top of that, Mr. Sweeney suffers from high blood pressure, over-the-top cholesterol, cirrhosis of the liver, hepatitis A, B and C, benign prostatic hyperplasia, osteoporosis, diabetes, spinal subluxation and cataracts."

"The cataracts were what brought me here," said Sweeney. "Once it became too hard to read Weekly World News, I decided to see a doctor. Unfortunately, I couldn't read the signs listed at the physician. "Frankly, I'm amazed he's still alive. His body's immune system is useless. I think it's the sugar he gets from his steady — indeed, only — diet of snack cakes."

Dr. Fittle has begun tackling each ailment one at a time, although he's not sure he can cure Sweeney completely.

"The best case scenario will leave him as sick as a dog," said

There's gold in . . .

THEM THAR HILLS

By MICHAEL ROVIN

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — The phrase 'There's gold in them thar hills' was first coined during the Gold Rush in the mid 1800s. For more than a century and a half, it has come to mean that there is opportunity for wealth in some place or endeavor.

"We now know better," said archaeologist Warren Tribes. "'Them Thar Hills' is actually a place. And there really is gold there!"

Last week, Tribes unearthed a map in Gold Digger's Graveyard, a pauper's cemetery for prospectors who died during the Gold Rush.

"The map was drawn by James O'Toole, who perished from dysentery before he could use it," Tribes explained. "The drawing was based on a description by a Native American whose family had lived in the area for countless generations. There's an arrow pointing to a series of low peaks labeled Them Thar Hills.

"Though O'Toole spoke the name with his dying breath, no one at the time took him literally," said Tribes. "The map was left in his pocket when he was buried in a tattered white sheet."

ARCHAEOLOGIST Warren Tribes confirms location of Them Thar Hills, a series of low peaks two miles west of the Black Hills indicated on a map unearthed in Gold Digger's Graveyard.

According to the map, Them Thar Hills is two miles west of the Black Hills, where one of the last deposits of gold was found. After carefully following O'Toole's directions, Tribes arrived at the location indicated by the arrow. Despite years of landslides and erosion, he found traces of gold dust on the surface.

"No doubt this is why O'Toole died poor," Tribes said. "The gold seems very deeply buried.

"Unfortunately, the days of a man panning a tent, then spending years prospecting with a pick-ax and dynamite are long gone. It would probably cost more to dig out the gold than it's worth."

Despite his disappointment, Tribes immediately moved onto his next project.

"One of my associates in Agua Dulce, Calif., has heard legends of a deposit of silver in the mountains nearby," said Tribes. "All we have to do is figure out where 'Hyo' is."

THE MAP found by Tribes was drawn by James O'Toole, left, who died during the Gold Rush and was buried in a pauper's cemetery for prospectors.

NASA reveals lines rejected in favor of Neil Armstrong's 1st words on moon!

By MARK MILLER

WASHINGTON, D.C. – "That's one small step for a man, one giant leap for mankind."

These immortal words, uttered by astronaut Neil Armstrong when he became the first man to set foot on the moon, continue to inspire generations of Americans about the wonders of outer-space exploration. Few realize, however, that other phrases were suggested for that honor – phrases deemed not worthy enough to be the first words spoken on the moon.

These less-than-immortal words – suggested both by the astronauts and various NASA employees and subcontractors – came to light in January when NASA declassified more than 250,000 pages of historical

Elizabeth Hoteher: "These 10 phrases were on the final list that proved most popular among NASA employees for use after the first step on the moon."

"O.K., now Buzz can quit asking, 'Are we there yet?'"

"Hey, there's a river here – and it must be wider than a mile!"

"Man, we should definitely be able to get a date after this!"

"That's one long trip for a man, one giant shock when I get back home."

"I'm king of the world!"

"Wow! There's the Earth. I think I can see my house from here!"

"Boy, it's dark. Hey, Pink Floyd – got an idea for ya."

"Say, there's some yokel calling earthbound!"

U.S. SCIENTISTS

By EDWARD BAIRD
Weekly World News

PHOENIX, Arizona — American geneticists brought a 500-year-old mummy back to life in one of the most dramatic and controversial experiments ever!

That's the word from Dr. Martin Stern, a research biologist who was a key figure in the top secret project, until he resigned over "moral and ethical concerns" and blew the whistle on colleagues who chose to continue their work at a private facility in the Arizona desert.

"The experiment succeeded beyond anyone's expectations and that is why I had serious problems with it," Dr. Stern, 37, told science reporters.

"It was one thing to attempt to regenerate the mummy and another thing to see that it was actually beginning to happen.

"Once I realized that we had a literal power over life and death I bailed out. I'm a scientist — a damn good scientist. But I don't want to play God."

As incredible as it might sound, Dr. Stern's report is clearly in line with recent advances in the field of genetics.

BRING MUMMY BACK TO LIFE!

Shocked doc blows whistle on top secret experiment!

Dr. Martin Stern

The regeneration of dead tissue is more or less routine in laboratories all around the world.

But the top secret Phoenix experiment marked the first time that anyone had tried to revive a human being instead of simple tissue or cells.

"This is one of the most ambitious projects ever undertaken," said Dr. Stern, noting that "the regeneration process itself is enormously complicated.

"Suffice it to say that infusions of blood, water and nutrients coupled with an electrification procedure actually revived the mummy.

"Portions of its brain show signs of life and one eye is completely open. Small patches of flesh around the mummy's ear, ankle and knee cap, in addition to nine of its 10 fingers, are as vibrant and supple as my own."

Dr. Stern refused to name the privately owned research group that is experimenting with the mummy but did release pictures that indicate the creature is, in fact, a living entity.

The mummy was stolen from a 600-year-old Incan tomb and smuggled back to the United States in 1994. And while Dr. Stern isn't sure what will become of the creature, he suspects that the experiment will continue "as long as the mummy's tissue responds."

"The revival of the mummy stands as a monument to the advance of science but it is a morally bankrupt experiment," continued Dr. Stern.

"Maybe I'm old-fashioned, but I happen to think that a human life is God's property — not mankind's."
